Part XXVII of "Cuneiform Texts from Babylonian Tablets, etc." contains texts from fifty-nine tablets and fragments from the Kouyunjik Collections. The texts are augural in character, and are copied from tablets made by order of Ashur-bani-pal, King of Assyria from B.C. 668 to B.C. 626, for the Royal Library at Nineveh.

Augury plays an important part in Babylonian and Assyrian religion, and a large and organized body of the priesthood concerned itself with the interpretation of signs and portents, as foretellers of the course of future events. Almost every event of daily life had its significance to the trained expert, and it is natural that special importance should have been attached to any unusual phenomena attending both human and animal births. The texts published in this Part are portions of a large series of tablets on which the forecasts or omens connected with birth have been collected and classified by the Babylonian and Assyrian priests.

In early days an augur, when consulted as to a portent that had taken place, had, doubtless, to decide its meaning without reference to precedent; but, in course of time, all extraordinary occurrences, and the results said to have followed them, were written down. Thus, the successful practitioner was obliged to undergo a prolonged study of the augural literature before he was in a position to pronounce on the significance of any particular event. The principal remains of this class of Babylonian literature that have come down to us occur on a large number of tablets from the Royal Library at Nineveh, of which several of the finest and best written texts are here published. It may be noted that while many of the birth portents enumerate abnormalities, which are of not infrequent occurrence in nature, others are of such a monstrous and impossible character that they may reasonably be regarded as referring to events in dreams, rather than to occurrences which might be expected to take place in everyday life.

The copies have been made by Mr. P. S. P. Handcock, B.A., and revised and corrected by Mr. L. W. King, M.A., F.S.A., Assistants in the Department.

DESCRIPTION OF PLATES.

SERIES    OR  .

Many of the tablets belonging to this series can be arranged in order of sequence, either by means of their catch-lines, or by the scribe's notification of the number in the series to which the tablet in question belongs; in the case of others, which are without number or catch-line, it is sometimes possible to determine their position in the series by comparison with those whose place is already fixed. Many of the texts belonging to this series, while admitting of a general classification, are found to contain only extracts from one or more tablets. Often a note is appended stating the number of lines taken from the composition. In two or three cases the tablet is of the small oblong type, characteristic of those containing astrological reports. There are yet other tablets, and fragments of tablets, the contents of which, while apparently dealing with the same class of portents, do not present a sufficient degree of similarity with any already classified to justify our assigning them to any particular place in the series. It should be noted that, in the following plates, some of these tablets are, for the purpose of comparison, classified with the numbered tablets of the series and their duplicates. It is clear, from the extraordinary character of some of the births which form the subject of portents, that they are to be understood as relating to dreams rather than to actual occurrences.
